1. In an effort to eradicate polio and improve children's health in Afghanistan, the Taliban administration has decided to begin a door-to-door immunisation programme next month, with women serving as frontline workers. The declaration by the World Health Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund is a significant step forward in a nation known as the "world's polio capital," where vaccinators have confronted the dual difficulties of a lack of access to patients and deadly conflict. According to authorities, the five-day national distribution of the polio vaccine, which is administered orally and in several doses, will begin Nov. 8.

1. Despite fears that the nation would face a terrible famine, India plans to send food and medical aid to Afghanistan this winter. India is thinking of sending 50,000 metric tonnes of wheat and medical supplies to Afghanistan. This, however, is subject to Pakistan's approval. Previously, Prime Minister Narendra Modi called for "immediate and unfettered" humanitarian assistance for Afghan citizens. Modi remarked during the G20 Afghanistan meeting that the Afghan people have a deep link with India and that every Indian knows the anguish of the Afghan people suffering from famine and malnutrition.
