Human Rights under Taliban

1. According to reports, the Afghan Taliban has detained a guy for selling at least 130 women after enticing them in with promises of marriage for money. "The individual was arrested by the Taliban provincial police in northern Jawzian province," stated Damullah Seraj, the Taliban provincial police chief. The individual would target underprivileged families desperate to improve their living conditions and situations, according to police officials. The man would assure the families that he would find them a wealthy spouse, then cleverly relocate them to different areas before selling them into slavery.
